FRCOG FRCPI

consultant in obstetrics & gynaecology

Dr Peter McKenna qualified from UCD in 1974. He worked as an Intern in St Vincent's Hospital and then in the National Maternity Hospital, Holles Street where he worked in both Obstetrics and in the Neo-natal Unit. Following this, he went to England for five years where he worked in Birmingham and Sheffield in a number of hospitals, all delivering obstetric and gynaecological services.

On returning to Ireland in the early 80's, he worked as a lecturer in Trinity which involved clinical duties in the Adelaide Hospital and Rotunda. Following this he was a Senior Registrar and Assistant Master in the Rotunda and was appointed to Jervis Street Hospital and the Rotunda as a Consultant in 1985. Prior to the closure of Jervis Street, he moved to the Mater Hospital and has been a Consultant there and at the Rotunda since 1986.

He was Master in the Rotunda from 1995 - 2001 and during this time the hospital celebrated its 250th anniversary and began planning a substantial hospital renovation.

Over this period, the hospital introduced several clinical services such as the introduction of amniocentesis for early pregnancy diagnosis and the use of frozen zygotes to facilitate better outcomes in IVF (In Vitro Fertilization) cycles.

His current appointment is with the Rotunda and Mater Hospitals and he has a wide range of interests in general obstetrics and gynaecology and in particular, maternal illness such as cardiac disease in pregnancy.

He is married with four children - three daughters and a son.
